

Year Ahead / Year in Review

The Gift of Time

Think about it, smart companies invest time and money in their management staff by whisking them away from the day-to-day work environment to an “offsite meeting.” By changing their employees’ surroundings and providing time away from the office, companies create a setting where communication flows, creative thinking is encouraged, achievements are acknowledged, strategies are implemented, and plans evolve for a successful and profitable upcoming year. Why not take a tip from smart business leaders and give you and your partner the time within a creative setting in which to map your future together?

You may want to schedule a few days to complete this entire process. Many users of the Y.A./Y.R. method, especially during their first time, will need a couple of days to adequately complete it. In fact, it is not uncommon to take two or more weekends to complete. If you find you need a whole weekend for Year Ahead and another for Year in Review, by all means schedule it.

There is no reason to rush through it; completing it is not another task to check off your To Do list – it is an investment in your future. So enjoy the process and know that you have given yourself the gift of time in which to dream, discover, plan, and succeed in making this next year your best year yet.
